When Morris Bellamy, a reclusive author, dies at age 89, his shocking will sends ripples through the small town of Haven, New Hampshire. He bequeaths his entire fortune and unpublished manuscript to a teenager named John Rothstein, who claims to have discovered the manuscript in a library. But as Bill Hodges investigates, it becomes clear that there is more to this case than meets the eye.

As Hodges digs deeper, he discovers that the manuscript contains a chilling account of a brutal murder that occurred 30 years ago. The victim was a young woman named Missy Donatelli, and her killer has never been found. Hodges suspects that Rothstein is somehow connected to the crime, but the teenager refuses to cooperate.

With the help of his loyal friend Holly Gibney, Hodges races against time to uncover the truth behind Missy's murder. As they follow the clues, they find
