In What Was Thinking, John Gapper, the acclaimed financial journalist, takes a critical look at the decisions made by bankers, regulators, and politicians that led to the global financial meltdown of 2008. He argues that the crisis was not simply a case of bad luck or irrational behavior, but rather the result of a series of deliberate choices that were made in the pursuit of short-term profits.

Gapper reveals how the deregulation of the financial industry, the proliferation of complex and risky financial products, and the failure of regulators to properly supervise the banking system all contributed to the crisis. He also shows how the global economy became increasingly interconnected and interdependent, which made the crisis more severe and widespread.

What Was Thinking is a gripping and thought-provoking book that offers valuable insights into the causes of the global financial meltdown and how we can prevent similar disasters from happening in the future.

Praise for What Was Thinking
